CROSBY S. NOYES ...... Editor THE EVENING STAR has a regular and permanent circulation in Washington thre times larger than that of any other paper in the city. As a local NEWS paper and Advertising Medium it has no competitor.

Over twenty years ago Congress authorized the Baltimore and Potomac railroad to extend its line across the Long bridge, and to make the necessary changes in the bridge to accomplish this extension. The railroad acted upon this authority, occupied, changed and used the bridge. This structure with its solid causeway, its numerous piers across the main channel, surrounded by mountains of stone heaped there by the railroad to prevent floods from sweeping away the rotting woodwork, has proved to be a gigantic dam, turning the flood water of the Potomac in upon the lower sections of Washington including Pennsylvania avenue. The city demands that the dam give way to a bridge, that a viaduct under which both floods and people may pass take the place of the solid. obstructive causeway, that the chain of rocky mountains which the railroad has created at the bottom of the river, reducing the available room for the passage of water by at least a third, be removed, and that a high bridge with few piers be substituted for the present low-lying structure. The railroad seeks to retain the bridge as it is. Worse than this its, plan is to broaden and heighten the structure, including the causeway, and to run an additional track across it, thus aggravating the nuisance and menace of the Long bridge dam. It asked Congress at the last session for permission to carry out its plan, and Congress failed to grant it. It attempted to obtain the assent of the engineer officers in charge of the flats improvements, but these officers have ever been mindful of the public interests and the law, and it failed in that quarter. Then it appealed to Secretary Elkins, who as a railroad magnate might be supposed to have a sympathetic, fellow feeling, and it obtained what it desired. The theory of the railroad and Secretary Elkins is that the grant to the road of the privilege of altering the bridge to extend tracks across it in 1870 lasts for all time, and that the railroad can without any additional assent of Congress, fifty or a hundred years after the original legislation, make such changes in the bridge as it pleases for the purpose of track extension, even though these changes involve an occupation of additional public property by a broadening of the causeway. The railroad in effect confessed that it had no such right by applying to the present Congress for permission to do this very thing. Secretary Elkins is apparently alone in his legal position, reversing the sound policy of his engineer subordinates. The whole spirit of the Supreme Court decision printed in full recently in THE STAR, is opposed to any such extraordinary claim. The fact remains that the city instead of getting rid of the nuisance and obstruction of Long Bridge is threatened by a dam which has within a short time been broadened and heightened and the additional ground necessary for this purpose has been unlawfully appropriated from a public park, which it is the duty of the Secretary of War to protect against all trespassers, whether great or small, whether lime or cement dealers or his powerful friends and coworkers in the railroad business.

It may be that Secretary Elkins has been imposed upon, and that his consent to the milroad to occupy additional public property on the flats, not one inch of which is lawfully at his disposal for such use, may be withdrawn when he knows the facts.

The people of Washington mean that Long Bridge dam which has caused great damage in the past and which periodically threatens life and millions of property shall go. The courts and Congress will be appealed to for redress to perpetuate the obstructive nuisance.

The law which gave to the railroad the use of the bridge required it to maintain the structure in good condition for ordinary travel, and provides for forfeiture of the right to use if this requirement is disregarded. In the bill which It framed and presented to Congress at the last session the railroad admitted the obvious fact that "said bridge" is "unsafe for ordinary travel." The right to use the bridge has been forfeited. The bridge should be removed, as an obstruction to navigation, under the statutes, if the danger to flood-threatened Washington is entirely disregarded. And finally in recently occupying and using for railroad purposes a long strip of the flats in broadening the causeway without authority of Congress the railroad is as much subject to the criminal proceedings against trespassers as the small lime and cement dealers whom Secretary Elkins has valiantly ejected.

The United Kingdom of Great Britain and Ireland with all its dependencies is said to be much disturbed over the allegation that officers of the United States Navy had suborned the testimony of certain Alaskan Indians on Bering Sea matters by the liberal internal application of whiskey. That the evidence secured by representatives of this country is damaging to the elaims of Great Britain soon to be adjudged by arbitration-is made plain by the fact that a Canadian envoy extraordinary is now endeavoring to have these testifying Indians revise or reverse their sworn statements. How much whiskey is being dispensed in cross-examination does not appear, but the advantage is all with the Canadian commissioner, for with the experience of his antagonists at his disposal the Dominion bottle is hardly empty, while the dispensers of star-spangled and eleemosynary intoxication are no longer on the coast.

Forty thousand children go breakfastless to the schools of London. In that great metropolis attendance at school is compulsory whether the children be hungry or otherwise, so the school board is very properly paying some attention to the physical as well as mental condition of the unfortunate little ones. Of course Washington has no such poor as are common in big manufacturing cities, but it might be well to find out how many boys and girls do go hungry to school here, and then, carrying the investigation to a proper conclusion, see how many youngsters there are who by reeson of hunger and nakedness cannot avail themselves of the excellent educational opportunities common in this city.

It is quite evident at this writing (10:30 o'clock a.m.) that we shall hardly be able to wait upon all comers today.

We shall do the best we can and suggest that

We shall do the those who are unable to get waited on call again tomorrow.

We shall not advertise special items in Ladies Cloaks today, for it is almost impossible to say that any special style will be here to norrow.

Do not put off your buying until the best of the season's styles are sold, for from now on it will be almost impossible to duplicate any particular styles, especially the best seliers—such as the Cape Coats and others. Saturday's Sale Of Children's Coats And

We do not keep the cheap qualities of Children's Cloaks and Coats, for the reason that we do not believe that it is economy for you to buy them or any satisfaction in our sell All we have can be depended upon for style, fit and dorubility.
